Amenities

Strong relationship between unit size and price

Unit Size (sqft & bedrooms) and Price

Location can affect high-end of price range

Price by Neighborhood District

Some amenities command a premium

Price by Parking Situation

Price by Laundry Facilities

Model construction and selection

Feature Selection

Continuous Variables

→ Unit size (sqft)

Discrete Variables

→ Bedrooms

→ Bathrooms

Ordinal Variables

→ Parking

→ Laundry

Categorical

→ Pets

→ Neighborhood

Engineering

Polynomial Features

→ Degree = 2

Regularization methods tried

→ Ridge ($\alpha = \sim 8$)

→ Lasso ($\alpha = \sim 6$)

Model Selection

Ridge scored most consistent between training and validation testing

→ R^2

→ RMSE

→ MAE

Lasso performed consistently on R^2 , but showed greater variance between training and validation scoring on RMSE and MAE

Model results

R^2 Score

- Train: 81%
- Test: 77%

RMSE

- Train: $451
- Test: $477
- +5.7%

MAE

- Train: $341
- Test: $366
- +7.3%

Model evaluation

Tolerance of price variation is relative to apartment price and subjective to budget

- ~$400 can be substantial for one person
- but split between two or more people may be okay

Model does a poor job of predicting for units > $4,000 / month

- Residuals plot¹ shows greater variance above $4k
- Most SF apartments in sample fall between $2,500 and $4,000 per month²

²Appendix B - Distribution of rental prices in sample

Final thoughts

There could be other factors influencing rents

- Rent history, control
- Other amenities not standard in Craigslist posts (fitness facilities, common spaces, etc.)
- Other environmental or economic factors¹

Suggestions for future work

- Sample again when COVID's influence subsides
- Increase scope of scraping methods
 - ◆ Search text for key words like 'gym' or 'backyard' as additional amenities
 - ◆ Find information on security deposit and/or lease requirements
 - ◆ Implement image processing tools to evaluate apartment quality from photos
- Scam post identification
